

JULY 2017

A low supply of homes for sale coupled with an increase in buyer demand, especially at price points under $350,000, is the story this year in Phoenix, Central and Northern Arizona. Multiple offer situations and homes selling quickly at these price points means that buyers should move quickly and with confidence. The low inventory creates an opportunity for potential sellers to tap into this robust market. Higher price points, including luxury, continue to suffer from an excess of inventory.

JULY 2017

The increase in buyer demand and decrease in inventory, especially at lower price points, continues to drive increases in the median sales price in Phoenix, now at $245,000, similar to median sales prices from September of 2007. This means a recovery from the recession for many segments of the market and homeowners back into an equity position. Remember, market conditions can vary greatly by area and price point, so contact me for more information on your home's current value.

JULY 2017

Market conditions can vary greatly by price point and area. In Phoenix, a seller's market exists for homes priced under $600,000 a balanced market from $600,000-899,000, and above $899,000 a buyer's market. Market conditions are based on the relationship of supply and demand. In a seller's market, buyers will face increased competition from other buyers and a shortage of homes for sale to choose from. In a buyer's market, sellers will have more competition from other listings and face downward pricing pressure.

FINANCING YOUR HOME PURCHASE IS NOW CHEAPER AND EASIER

More buyers are able to finance their home purchase these days. Over 55% of buyers that financed had FICO scores between 600 and 749, and more buyers were able to finance with less than 5% down payment. This will help continue the positive momentum in the housing market.

MARKET INSIGHTS

We expect the robust real estate market in our community to continue through the second half of this year. Underlying market drivers are positive, including improving local employment conditions, economic growth, an increase in Millennials purchasing homes and accessibility to financing. New construction continues to lag behind buyer demand, which will contribute to a continued seller's market in most price points.

PROTECT YOURSELF FROM CONSUMER WIRE FRAUD

Aside from the positive housing market conditions, there is an increasing threat to our industry and consumers - wire fraud. Phishing attacks have intruded into the closing process of many real estate transactions, making both homebuyers and sellers a potential target for sophisticated cyber-criminals. Hackers are using email accounts of buyers and sellers and the professionals they're working with to learn when the closing is scheduled. Then they send an alert telling the buyer to wire the closing money to an "updated" bank account. The new account belongs to the phisher and chances of recovering your money are slim. An important tip to remember: Never send financial information by email, text message or social media and don't trust any wiring instructions received by email. Be suspicious and if you suspect any unsolicited communication, contact the authorized person directly. Take the time to understand what's being requested, and why - particularly if it's personal or financial information.

At Long Realty, we take this as a very serious threat and have put additional layers of cyber security in place to the reduce the risk of wire fraud. As a precaution though, please do your part to protect yourself.
